Replacing Screens

If carried out correctly, replacing your screens can be a snap. Be careless and you really will have to replace the whole screen, frame and all.

Most screens come in two basic types: standard window screens and screen doors.

Screen doors sit on rollers on springs and can typically just be lifted out with slight pressure. Lift and tilt the bottom toward your feet a couple of centimeters (an inch) to clear the bottom frame, then let the screen down. Never force it, don't tilt too far before dropping it and don't twist. You don't want to bend the frame or break the rollers.

Window screens are held in by friction and often a set of bow-shaped springs attached to the frame at the top and/or sides, also. Use the tabs integrated into the frame to lift up or sideways, whichever direction you have the most space.

Work at least one corner free, being careful not to twist more than a centimeter (half an inch). Screens aren't moved often and tend to stick. Be patient and work them loose a little at a time.

Lay the screen flat on a large, smooth surface. If you're concerned about scratching paint off the frame, put down a sheet or blanket first. Remove any stays or screws inserted through the mesh.

Screens are held in with a spline (a thin, cylindrical piece of rubber-like material) inserted into a shallow channel. Find the point where the spline ends and work it loose with an ice pick, tweezers or a screwdriver. Pull gently, but firmly, until the spline is removed. The screen mesh should pull out easily now. Always take care not to bend the frame.

Rolls of replacement mesh can be purchased at hardware stores or online in various lengths and widths. Kits typically come with a length of replacement spline. Measure your screen and allow for some waste. Pick up a spline roller, too. A small, wooden-handled tool with a metal roller on one or both ends, a spline roller looks like a pizza slicer with a dull circular blade.

Choosing A Contractor

A good contractor earns every dime you pay them, a bad contractor will take every dime you have.

There are several reasons good contractors make good incomes. They work hard over many years to acquire a wide set of useful skills. Good contractors almost always started as workmen of one kind or another - carpenter, plumber, electrician, you name it.

They know first hand what it takes to become skilled in those trades. They know by sight what constitutes work well done and when a job was completed poorly. Beyond that, they learn to be good businessmen as well.

Many may not have accounting and finance skills, but they know how to hire well. They know how to bid a job fairly and how to manage sub-contractors and workmen fairly and firmly.

That's the kind you're looking for. They're out there. If you could get recommendations from friends and family about a reliable, competent contractor you wouldn't be reading this. So what to do beyond that? To find one, start with common sense guidelines.

Ask for references. Hiring a contractor is an expensive proposition and this is no time to be shy. Automatic, unfounded suspicion will poison any business relationship at the outset. But good contractors aren't sensitive about providing names and phone numbers for satisfied former clients. They know that referrals are the lifeblood of their business.

Once you have them, check them. Prepare a list of questions about the size and complexity of the previous project. Ask about the initial budget and schedule and whether they were met. It sounds intrusive, but most people will share that information gladly.

They, too, know that a good contractor is golden. They know it's in their interest also to see that person succeed. That way, the next time they need those services he (or she, many are female these days) will still be in business.

AN IN DEPTH LOOK AT LIGHTING

Lighting Your Home

You buy a bulb at the store, put it into a fixture and flip the switch. On comes a light. What could be simpler?

True, many home lighting situations are as easy as that. But if you want to get the most out of your budget, and also to design a more pleasing and practical home environment, a little more thought is useful.

Lighting the bedroom, for example, can be as quick as the scenario described above. But you won't be getting the maximum value out of your lighting scheme. If you want lighting that offers better reading, with less eye strain, a little designing is needed. If you want to create an elegant atmosphere for evening that is still functional in the morning, a little homework is helpful.

Even when you're lighting the exterior of the home both esthetic and functional factors come into play. Home security requires careful placement of just the right kind of lights. Motion sensors are a great addition. Decorative accents to make your home look its best have to be carefully selected and optimally placed.

The deck is another opportunity to make your home shine, literally and figuratively. Post lights, recessed lighting and many other options are available to give that often used structure just the right illumination. Whether providing a safe walk along the surface, or a decorative glow along the path to the pool, deck lights can add a stellar look to an otherwise ordinary area.

Indoors, track lighting can perform a similar function, even though using very different means. Highlighting a fine piece of furniture or wall decoration is one popular purpose for track lighting. But they can even add dramatic spots and shadows to dress up an area where no objects reside at all.

Naturally, these design elements can be enhanced by using colored lights. But going one step further to give control over placement and intensity is another way to optimize your lighting design. Movable track lights, dimmer switches and many other forms of control increase the beauty and usefulness of these elements.

BATHROOM MAKEOVER MAGIC

Bathroom – The Most Neglected Room

Bathrooms don't get enough attention from homeowners. For a space where we can easily spend over 15% of our waking time, the decor is often minimal. Sure, a rug gets thrown down. We might even take a lot of time to get just the right towels. But what about the bathroom itself?

Start at the bottom. Flooring is important for both utilitarian and decorative reasons. Clearly, a good tile will help keep water from the underfloor. When it's kept in good repair, of course. But how much effort went into evaluating ceramic versus stone, hardwood vs laminate? For most of us, probably not enough.

Faucets and shower hardware are another example. Many will just accept whatever was in place when the home was built or bought. Sure, it's functional, but is it beautiful? Does it integrate well with the rest of the bathroom? Does it reflect the occupant's unique personality? Not always.

The same might be said of lighting. Often we just take what's there. It might glare too much. It might light certain areas poorly. But is there a nice looking wall sconce? Where are the accent lights to illuminate that dark nook where the toilet sits? The support for strip lights over the mirror may or may not match the style of the hot and cold water controls in the sink.

Molding is an afterthought for too many. It can provide one of the best touches to the overall design. It completes and complements the room. It gives an elegance and a look of 'being decorated' that is hard to match any other way.

Even paint is often selected solely for its functional character. That's certainly important, but it's only part of the job. A horizontal stripe along the ceiling to simulate molding is one possibility. A painted scene was common in the 18th century. The idea can be adapted to modern times.

Shower curtains and rods represent one of the simplest ways to decorate the bath. Most will do something here, if for no other reason that such things are often missing in a new or newly bought home. Replace it with more than just a plain white or colored piece of plastic. Let your personality show!

DESIGNING YOUR DREAM KITCHEN

INTRODUCTION

If you are looking for a challenge, why not plan to remodel your kitchen? It is one way to give your home that new home feeling. It also gives you a chance to entirely - or moderately, change the look or style of this special room in your home. In the process, you will can easily accomplish 2 important goals in many home remodels. You will increase the investment in your house, while adapting it to today's life styles.

Today's kitchens are among the most versatile they have ever been. Kitchens are no longer uni-purpose rooms. They exist for more than for simply cooking and serving a meal. Today's kitchens are gathering places. They are favorite hangouts for the family and their friends and guests. As the song goes, "You can always find me in the kitchen at parties."

Kitchens are where you and your family can cook and eat. It is also here where you and your tribe can work and even play. The kitchen is where the family often comes together. From here, many parents and individuals organize their daily activities. The kitchen table, corner nook or counter top becomes the place where people sit, a cold or hot drink in hand. Leaning over one of the kitchen's many surfaces, pen in hand or computer at their finger tips, they sit and pay their bills or plan a vacation. The kitchen is also the scene of many a heart-to-heart talk over a cup or 2 of coffee.

The kitchen is the heart of the house. It is also one of the first rooms many home buyers check out when they come to view a home. This is the so-called "hot ticket" among real estate agents. It is 1 of several reasons why people decide to remodel their kitchen. It increases the chances of their house being sold.

There are other reasons to remodel your home. They vary from family to family and person to person. Among the most popular is growth. The family has increased in size. Therefore, the usage of the kitchen has gone up. As a result, the family requires more space in the kitchen. Rather than move, they decide to remodel the kitchen so it will be more functional.

COMMON SENSE GUIDE TO HEATING YOUR HOME

Introduction

Are you going to freeze this winter, or spend hundreds of dollars staying warm and cozy inside? What if you could stay warm and enjoy the winter while actually SAVING money. Wouldn't that be nice?

In any given year, homeowners spend more money on heating their home during the winter (or cooling during the summer in warm clients) than on any other energy expenditure. According to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, investing in energy-efficient appliances can result in cost savings equivalent to thousands of dollars every year!

This guide is dedicated to any and all homeowners interested in learning what they can do to improve the heat efficiency of their home – without spending thousands of dollars. You don't have to hire a professional to winter proof your home, though you may want to hire a professional inspector at some point to assess what areas of your home need improvement. (For example, you may want to hire someone to check your furnace to make sure it is working efficiently).

While many consumers live in modern homes containing energy-efficient appliances, many others live in older homes. These homes are prone to problems including drafty windows and inefficient heating devices.

In this guide, you will learn practical, common sense tools for saving money on heating costs during the winter, without spending thousands of dollars.

You MIGHT decide to hire a professional to inspect your home at some point. You CAN however, use the resources section and learn how to conduct safe preliminary inspections on your own.

In fact, it's quite easy to find the places in your home that need repair when it comes to maximizing the fuel efficiency of your home. Most people, for example, find they need to seal their windows to prevent heat from escaping during the winter. How do you do that? You are about to learn.

CLEAR THE AIR: AIR PURIFIERS
DO THEY WORK AND ARE THEY WORTH IT?

INTRODUCTION

Take a deep breath. Do you know what you just breathed in? Do you think that there was nothing there but the air you need to breathe? Indoor air is clear and, if you are lucky, then it has no discernable unpleasant odor attached to it, but does this mean that the air is clean?

Breathing is something you do unconsciously, and if you want to go on living then you do it regularly. Everyone does it day after day and year after year. Usually, the air that you are breathing in is empty and clear as far as you can see so breathing does not get much thought. True, you may roll up your car windows if you drive into a cloud of dust or if you detect the familiar whiff of some unpleasant smell outside, but other than that you probably do not give much thought to breathing.

There are simply too many other things in life that demand your attention. You do not have time to pay attention to one more, especially when this is one thing that pretty much takes care of itself. After all, you spend most of your time inside and that protects you from all the pollution that is concentrated outside, right?

This begs the question of whether or not you would be able to tell if there was something in the air that you breathe that you do not want to be there. Right now you are probably not sure. You may never have been asked what is in the air you breathe, but not knowing could be affecting you more than you think.

Contemplating the purity of the air that you breathe makes things complicated. Air is not like food. You do not make a conscious choice about every breath that you draw into your body. You just do it. You may have thought potato chips were addictive but breathing is something that you have been hooked on since you took that first breath.

After all, it is not like you have the choice to just stop breathing. You cannot just wait until you get to a new location and put off breathing until you get there. You have to keep breathing if you want to keep on living. This means that you either

HOME AUTOMATION ESSENTIALS

What Is Home Automation?

As a very basic definition of home automation you could consider it to be anything that is able to be controlled in your home. If you have a remote or you have automatic control over the function within your home, you have home automation.

Today's standards are high. There are actually a number of different ways that you can install this type of automation into your home. What's important to know is that most of the automation that you will do will not require hard work. It won't require tearing apart your home or spending thousands of dollars on a simple system.

Home automation is something that the average person can do. Most of the products that you will find are simple to install and they don't have to be more than a few hours worth of a project.

Home automation can allow you, and your computer, to make the things that you need and do in your home easier to accomplish. Perhaps you want to control your security system? Or, perhaps you want to voice automate the lights in your home so that you can get into bed and then turn the lights out. Or, perhaps you want to be able to control your sound system from anyplace in your home.

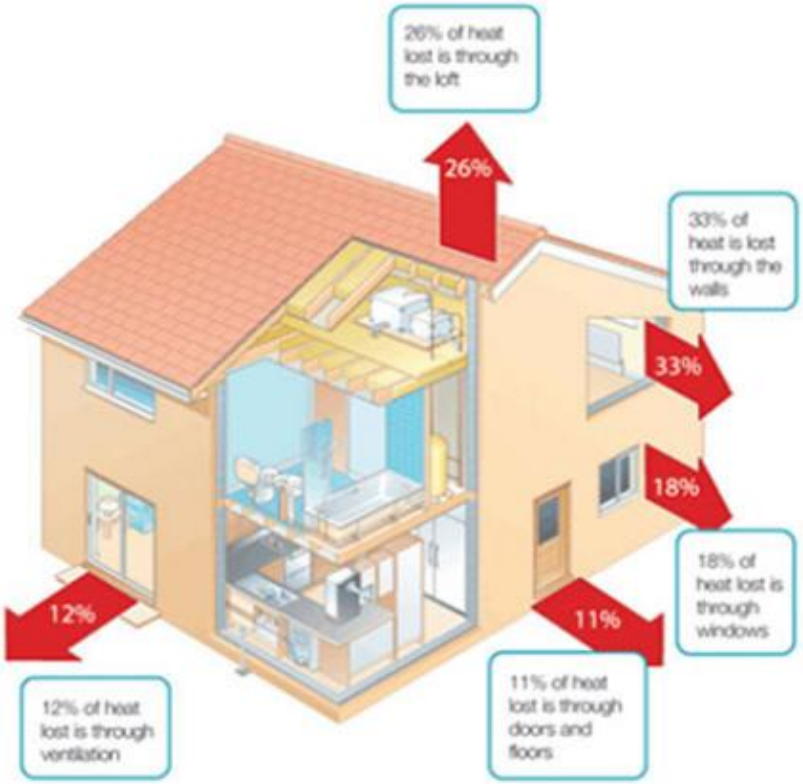
HVAC EXPLAINED



You many not be familiar with the initials HVAC together but they stand for heating, ventilating, and air conditioning. Many people also simply use the term climate control instead of HVAC. This is because the entire concept embraces what it takes to keep people comfortable in their climate. Since that will change based on external factors it is important for all of the elements to work properly.

Whether you are running your heater or your air conditioner, ventilation is a very important part of the process to look into. HVAC is something that has to be designed in homes and in businesses. Many of the concepts continue to be improved upon in order to ensure that everyone is comfortable. Older homes often have people in them complaining that they are warm in one room of it but freezing in another.

STAY COOL IN YOUR OWN POOL

INTRODUCTION

A swimming pool is one of the classic signs of the easy life. From the theme song of the Beverly Hillbillies to the closing scene of F. Scott Fitzgerald's "The Great Gatsby", swimming pools are associated with the rich, the leisurely, and the easy-going in life.

Which is why it's terrible when we learn, after we've spent a great deal of money and time selecting and installing a swimming pool, that that's no easy way to get an easy life. Maintaining a swimming pool can be a massive amount of work, one that makes even the best of us sometimes throw up our hands and say "What was I even thinking, digging this hole in my backyard and filling it up with expensive water?"

In this book, we'll talk about swimming pools. We'll talk about the different kinds of swimming pools available and how each is installed. We'll talk about the maintenance issues associated with each and what we need to do about different pools in different climates. And we'll talk about a few horror stories--not to frighten you so much as to make you aware that when the worst happens, you still have options--even if they are expensive.

As the modern poets say: the simple life is not so simple. The easy life isn't always easy. But with a firm grasp on some of these principles of year-round pool maintenance, you'll find it much easier than you otherwise would--and you'll have that much more time to enjoy the fruits of all your long efforts and labors.

TYPES OF POOLS

In talking about the different types of pools, it's important to remember three common-sense qualities that all pools have in common.

- All pools are gigantic holes in the ground.
- All pools are filled with water.
- The water in all pools needs to be filtered or purified in some way to make it safe for personal use.

TIP #1:

1. Update Your Front Door

Curb appeal is the first step in a successful home sale, and installing a beautiful, high-quality entry door is a simple home improvement that delivers impact both in buyer drive-bys and online listings. A new entry door will also help lower home energy costs and stand up to weather extremes

TIP #2:

2. Siding Is Not Longer Taboo

A tight, tidy home contributes to curb appeal and takes major home improvement worries off a potential buyer's list. Yes, you could repaint, but nowadays siding is the way to go for low maintenance, long term care. Spruce up your home's exterior by adding or repairing siding for an eye-catching, protective finish. And consider adding easy-to-install decorative trim elements to spruce up an otherwise dull exterior.

TIP #3:

3. Repair or Replace Your Roof

SA leaky roof allows water to penetrate inside, where it can ruin insulation and drywall, and create opportunity for mold. On a sunny day, use binoculars to spot cracked, curled, or missing shingles, which are signs that the roof is near its end of life. Also check flashing around chimneys, skylights, and roof valleys, and the rubber boots around vets for cracks.

TIP #4:

4. Install Energy Efficient Windows

Installing replacement windows is a home improvement that pays for every one, especially if you are considering selling your home. You'll earn valuable tax credits and the buyer will enjoy lower home energy bills. Even if you aren't planning on selling, you'll benefit greatly from the increased energy efficiency aspect.
